The publishing of the platform and the principles of the People's party has reduced to a merest handful the number of those who believe that any serious good can be expected from the People's party, or who desire its success. In fact the general expression among those who are still inclined to vote for the Green back candidates is that if there was the slightest chance for the success of that ticket they would not dare to run the risk in expressing their dissatisfaction in that way. But there are several other things to be considered before the voter may feel free to throw his vote away merely to show his disapproval of the candidate of his party. Such a course of action implies a complete indifference to other matters of national importance upon which the two parties are divided, an indifference to the admission of free Australian wool and Mexican lead, an indifference to the suppression of the negro vote of the south by intimidation and fraud. More than that implies an ignoring of all that has been accomplished through the Republican party by the efforts of leading Republicans towards the restoration of bimetallism. In every respect the Republican platform this year is superior to that of the Democrats or the People's party, and it is one of the standing wonders of the time how the Democratic politicians have been able to delude Republican voters into an indirect support of Cleveland through votes cast for Weaver. If the voting against silver and the voting against Colorado's interests has no other excuse than that Republican voters have a personal prejudice against the candidate of their party, the excuse is insufficient and the action proposed wholly unjustifiable.

The chief argument brought against the protective tariff in many instances is that it promotes selfishness among those who its interests are affected, and that it is a fruitful source of corruption and bribery. That this is true to a certain extent cannot be denied, but those who present the argument fail to show that it does not apply with equal force to a tariff with incidental protection. If the tariff is levied for revenue and is adjusted to give incidental protection, it becomes at once apparent that there is quite as much to be gained by those interested as if the tariff has a distinctly protective purpose from the first. In fact the ordinary observer can see little difference between a tariff levied for the necessary expenses of the government with incidental protection and one which is levied for protection upon such a scale as to provide only for the necessary expenses of the government. The only safe standing ground for the Democracy of to-day seems to be in the repudiation of their platform and in adopting a view of the tariff question which is simply that of the Republicans wrong end to.

The politicians who are endeavoring to cheat unwary Democrats into voting for the Weaver electors under an assumed name, have a great deal to say about the secretary of state being a purely clerical officer and having no choice or judgment in the matter of certifying nominations as the county clerks. But it should not be forgotten that two tickets were filed each purporting to be the choice of the Democracy, and the secretary was compelled to exercise a discretion in the matter. Some one must say whether the nominations are presented by the proper persons and according to the law, and this some one is the secretary of state. It also seems to us that while the courts of the state might interfere to enforce the performance of a stipulated duty by the secretary, as for instance to compel him to certify some nomination they cannot interfere or dictate the manner of the performance of a duty as for instance to say which of two nominations he should certify. That by law is for the secretary to decide, and it is supposed that in this as in all his other official acts he will perform his duty according to his ability and in good faith under his oath of office.

A better answer to the sneers that have been levied against the international monetary conference could be found than the rise in the price of silver which has followed the announcement of the date and place of its sessions. There is more practical benefit for the silver miners in this formulate but well started Republican administration than in all the wild and meaningless clamor of the third party. And yet many of the purposes of the Greenback silver men are antagonistic to the silver cause that every bit of support they can derive from the silver states will be surely used to the detriment of the people who give it.

The smoke from the great forest fires has become apparent in our atmosphere the past few days. We hope that each one of our readers will remember each time he sees the haze that hangs along the mountains that it results from the wanton destruction of our scanty forests and that the coming legislature ought to do something towards putting a stop to like occurrences in the future.

Florida was one of the states claimed for Weaver, and the calculations were not more than 30,000 votes out of the way. For People's party politicians, this is pretty good.

Even in Bokhara.

Review of Reviews.

Everyone has heard the story of the dervish who met the cholera on the desert and asked where it was bound. "To Damascus to slay 20,000." Meeting it again on returning the dervish said, "You liar, you killed 100,000!" "No," said the cholera, "I killed only 20,000—fear killed the rest." The panic fear, however, is less deadly to spectators, flushes the drains and incurs day, because it stirs up the sanitary expenditures which, save on compulsion of cholera, would never be sanctioned by parsimonious sanitary boards. M. Lessar, the brilliant Russian diplomatist and engineer, who for some time past has been the resident at Bokhara, told Mr. Stead the other day that his mission had averted the visitation of cholera by a rigorous sanitary reform, which has made Bokhara one of the cleanest cities in central Asia. The emir wanted to visit St. Petersburg. M. Lessar gave him a hint that he could not be received if Bokhara remained a reeking cesspool; and forthwith the work of sanitation was begun. All the sanitaries are now outside the city, and every morning all the night-soil is carried by asses into the country. Bokhara has not had a single case of cholera, and the emir will be graciously received in St. Petersburg this autumn. It is an excellent illustration of the value of sanitation, even in the most unlikely quarters. Unfortunately we have no equivalent to a longed-for trip to St. Petersburg with which to bribe our local sinners into a display of sanitary activity. Nothing will do that short of the sudden and sensational slaughter of a certain number of taxpayers, and as this human sacrifice seems to be indispensable, it is a merciful arrangement that the work should be intrusted to a disease as rapid and decisive as the cholera. It parades in about three weeks, and as its victims are seldom all three days, there is at least no prolonged torture before death.

The World's Congresses.

Review of Reviews.

The World's congresses of 1893 will not seek to do everything. If they should attempt to do this, confusion and failure would result. Their work will be limited to certain specific objects, which are believed to be capable of attainment. They will endeavor to present in every department a summary of progress down to the date of the Columbian exposition. They will also endeavor to present in a graphic and comprehensive manner the pending problems of progress, the difficulties which impede their solution and the means by which those difficulties may be removed. It is obvious that there will not be time nor opportunity for any prolonged debate over any of the great themes which will be presented in any of the proposed congresses. The papers for the congresses of 1893 are not to be submitted to the passing decision of those who may happen to attend, but to the deliberate judgment of the enlightened world. Themes will not be selected to suit particular persons, but, the proper subjects having been chosen, the persons believed to be the best fitted to make adequate presentation of them will then be chosen. It is expected that each selected writer will be given at least half a year for the preparation of the paper assigned to him. The regulations in regard to papers and discussions will all be fixed with reference to the proposed publication, and not merely with reference to the oral presentation during the congress. The auxiliary committees will trust their advisory councilors throughout the world to give them good advice in relation to themes, persons and modes of proceeding, and hope that, on the other hand, it will be believed that they are both willing and able to follow the good advice so to be given.

Comfortable Positions.

The position of the body during literary composition has always been a matter of great concern to authors. Charles Kingsley and numerous other writers of distinction found that their ideas flowed more freely when they stood on their feet slowly pacing the room, while one eminent composer did his best work sitting bolt upright in a gilded drawing room chair attired in his finest clothing and an American poet of note rests on his spine his feet high in the air to write his most enjoyable verse.

On this point Dr. Lander Brunton has made some investigations that entitle him to the world's gratitude for he think that he has thereby discovered the secret of having ideas at will. In the course of his experiments he placed himself in various positions, and found that his mental activity was greatest when he lay flat on a table. Then ideas bubbled up in his mind fast and he thought that as he was lying quite well in a recumbent position he might sit up but it would not do.

The moment, sarcastic lector, that I raised my head my ideas vanished as after blank as I put my feet on the floor in that position.—Chicago Herald.

Choosing a Minister.

MCKINLEY DISSECTS.

HIS VICTIMS ARE SENATOR HILL AND MR. WILSON.

How the "Exponent of Protection," in an Address Before the Philadelphia Manufacturers' Club, Exposes Democratic Inconsistencies.

The following is a portion of Governor McKinley's recent Philadelphia speech, taken from a verbatim report published in The Times, of that city:

Senator Hill, of New York in his recent speech in Brooklyn rejects the tariff plank of the national platform and announces one for himself. His is a tariff for revenue only with incidental or accidental protection, but that I may do him no injustice I will read you the exact words of his speech:

"We believe in revenue with incidental protection and not in protection with incidental revenue. In so far as the tariff is necessary to meet the necessities of the government it may be imposed and any other benefits which may be legitimately derived from its imposition may and do necessarily accompany it. If the burden opposed would operate to prevent foreign competition the benefit is indirect and unobjectionable; that is if it comes by accident it is unobjectionable."

Reading further from Mr. Hill's speech he says, "President Harrison in his ingenious letter of acceptance endeavors to place our party in a false attitude by calling attention to the fact that while our platform in 1876, was adopted in 1884, contains an express plank upon this question of the equalization of wages, yet it was omitted in 1892 and asserts (that is, the president does) that we have changed our position."

Mr. Hill says, "I beg to differ with him. There has been no change. It is not always practicable to place in a platform the details of proposed legislation. Whenever you require a bill of his particulars then you have got a Democrat!

"The platforms of 1884 and 1888," this is still from Mr. Hill, "were elaborate and lengthy, and it was desirable to amplify them. General principles were stated in 1892 rather than particulars, as in 1884. We stand not only upon our platform of 1892, but upon the Mills bill."

The Mills bill! They stood on that in 1888 until after the election, and this is the first suggestion of a revival of it that I have heard since, for you will remember that the house of representatives of the Fifty-second congress, which was Democratic by 140 majority, rejected the author of the Mills bill and refused to make him speaker, and when they came to make tariff legislation rejected the whole principle of the Mills bill.

"We stand not only upon our own platform of 1892, but upon the Mills bill, which was the latest general Democratic legislation upon tariff subjects."

I am glad that Senator Hill doesn't count what was done by the Fifty second congress. He doesn't count that as amounting to anything, for he calls the legislation of four years ago the last legislation of the Democratic party.

Then he says: "If I were asked to define as concisely as possible the whole Democratic policy I should state it in substantially these words: 'We favor a tariff for revenue only, limited to the necessities of the government, economically administered and so adjusted in its application as to encourage productive industries at home and afford just compensation to labor, but not to create or foster monopolies.' These are the cardinal principles upon which the details of all tariff legislation should be based. That is the platform of 1884 and of 1888."

Now this explanation of the position of the Democratic party might go without question, as it has gone in many campaigns of the past, but for the fact that the very thing that Mr. Hill says in his new platform—that very thing was rejected by the national Democratic convention of 1892. It was stricken out by the vote of 564 to 333—the very thing he employs—and this explanation of the Democratic position might go unchallenged, even from Senator Hill but for the fact that Grover Cleveland, in his Madison Square garden speech, approved of the platform at Chicago and accepted nomination on it.

Hill would make a platform for the Democratic party. He isn't in a position to do it. I speak of him with great respect and without meaning any discourtesy, and hoping that it will be justified in honorable debate. I want to suggest to him that not only was his platform rejected but he himself was rejected.

The ipse dixit might be accepted but for the utterances of the Hon. William L. Wilson of West Virginia, who presided over the deliberations of the national convention of 1892 and he who is one of the best informed and the most cultivated of the tariff reformers of the United States calls the language employed by Mr. Hill as a makeshift and a "straddle" in his article in the September number of The North American Review, that of this month. Listen to what Mr. Wilson says:

"When the recent convention met at Chicago the representatives of the Democratic party were united and zealous in their devotion to tariff reform and full of the confidence born of many victories freshly won under its banner. They expected a clear and courageous statement of fundamental party principle, and of the party's attitude to existing law.

The resolutions, says Mr. Wilson, as reported to the committee left nothing to be desired on the latter head (that means its indignation at the new tariff law) but instead of the former contained a preliminary paragraph or two in which with much that was admirable appeared some of the familiar but now unsatisfactory phrases of the makeshift of 1884.

But Mr. Hill says there is no essential difference between the platform of 1884 and 1892.

The convention, says Mr. Wilson, with very slight protest from the minority, took the risk of striking out these phrases and of inserting in place of them a clear declaration of fundamental party doctrine. The inserted words are these: We denounce Republican protection as a fraud and a robbery of the majority of the American people for the benefit of the few.

"Then if protection is a fraud incidental protection is an incidental fraud.

"We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the federal government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only.

"Do you know what that reads like? It reads like the nullification resolutions of South Carolina. The very language employed was that congress had no power to lay and collect duties for other purposes than revenue purposes, and if there is any difference between the resolutions of nullification and this resolution it is because the framers of this resolution were more familiar with the Confederate constitution than those nullification resolutions of sixty years ago.

Says Mr. Wilson: "This is no new doctrine. It is a return to the frank and explicit declarations of 1840 and 1880 showing that the party is now ready to avow in the thick of battle what it then avowed before the combat opened. There is little need for comment upon the paragraph of the report of the committee which was stricken out in convention. They were no longer sides but encumbrances to the fight. The temper and courage of the party are mightily different in 1893 from what they were in 1884. What was necessary prudence then would be cowardice now."

That is the declaration of the president of the national Democratic convention that nominated Grover Cleveland. Will Senator Hill please observe this scorching rebuke administered to him in advance of his Brooklyn speech?

"The convention," says Mr. Wilson, "responded fully and heartily to the feeling of the party it represented. It showed its confidence in tariff reform as the great and winning issue by its nominating Mr. Cleveland in the face of warning that would have daunted from a man who did not stand for a cause. It meant that there should be nothing ambiguous about the party's attitude to the cause, and that the statement of its principles should not be overlaid with cumulative limitations. In all this the convention was right. We have passed that stage in the great tariff controversy where it is necessary or proper to encumber party platforms with limitations, promises and protests."

They had reached the stage in the fight in the opinion of the majority when they could speak the truth and announce without quibbling the party doctrine, and they did it. And it is their party platform upon which you must pass free trade simple and pure—as simple and pure as the British free trade, for England although she is called a free trade country collects more than $100,000,000 every year from custom services, but she does it by putting her tariff upon foreign products that do not come into competition with her own products.

Is This a Tax?

In September 1890, cotton ties were quoted at $1 12 per bundle.

The following month the McKinley bill became a law by which the duty on cotton ties was made protective. As a result American manufacturers started making these ties on a larger scale, active home competition commenced and today, according to The Iron Age of Sept. 1, they can be purchased for 83 to 90 cents per bundle.

A Good Sign for Republicans.

The wheat crop in Kansas is a disappointment; that is to say it is 7,000,000 bushels more than the official estimates. Seventy million bushels of wheat is a pretty good showing for a state on the verge of starvation to say nothing of corn, fruit, dairy products, etc.—Kansas City Journal.

band and others. Services have been held, I think, every Sunday, at the pit, and who shall say what the harvest may be.

It is with deepest regret that we chronicle the death of one of our most faithful and beloved sisters, who was called home in March: Sister Bell, who has for years been one of our fearless, ready workers, always ready to do all and more than she was able to do to forward the good work. The Woman's Relief corps, of which she was a member, joined with the W. C. T. U. in holding a fitting memorial service for Sister Bell. And now, dear sisters, let us go "forward, not backward, up and not down," for the coming year is not close, with a better record of work than the past year can tell, for in our work we must laugh at discouragement and trusting God in all things we can know no such word as fail.

Respectfully submitted,
HELEN A. BURT,
Recording Secretary.

HIS HOPES WERE BLASTED

His Ambition Was to Marry an Heiress but Fate Was Against Him.

I was a clerk in a fancy dry goods store. My salary was quite small, and I had a lot of wedding ambition, I might add, that was not realized.

One afternoon the proprietor and I went to a ball game, but [illegible] An old gentleman entered the store and informing me that it was a wedding ordered oranges, bananas and other fruit. I placed them in a basket and as his fat fingers twined about the handle of it, "One thirty-five."

"Dollar thirty-five, eh? Well, and I?" The elderly fruit [illegible] no time to further elucidate, he [illegible] the basket and said frankly, "My orders to trust no one, sir."

"What's that?" queried the wouldbe debtor.

I calmly repeated my former statement.

"Do you know who I am?" he asked gravely.

"I don't know, nor care, no money, no goods. 'Orders are orders.'" I [illegible] breath, and placed the basket on the counter.

"Why! That's an insult, sir, to me."

I felt a little impudent that afternoon, and grinned and said, "I guess it is."

"You, you impudent three dollar a week (!!! tapping puppy! I'll have that [illegible] or you'll suffer for it," he said hoarsely and shook his fist in my face.

"Tilt tapping!" That hurt me. Relaxing over the counter I informed him that for two cents I'd wipe the floor with his form. He put his hand into his pocket, produced a couple of pennies and told me to "sail in."

I "sailed in," and soon he sailed out. He howled for the police, and stepping out I grasped him by his coat collar and rushed him around the corner. Then I went back to the store to again dream of heiresses. About an hour later a young lady entered. She was beautiful, and judging by her diamonds and dress an heiress to a fortune. I did my prettiest, and before she left I had received an invitation to call on her that evening. I thought I was in luck.

That evening I called, and she received me as a princess might a princely wooer. She excused herself for a few moments, and soon I heard heavy footsteps in the hall. I looked up, and there stood the old gentleman who had "sailed out." He advanced, I arose, and holding out my hand with a feeble smile said, "How do you do, sir?"

"I'll show you how I do in a minute," he growled, and made a strike at my head with the club he carried.

"Don't hurt the poor fool, papa," the heiress said. Papa ordered her to retire and then cried, "Come on, men! Give it to him!"

Three tough looking citizens stepped into the room.

Those men were professionals, I think, for every time they hit I fell, and every time they kicked I went up. I was dragged to the door, thrown down the steps, kicked across the lawn and laid to rest in the gutter.

I am driving a coal cart now.—Cor. New York Recorder.

The Strength of the Clan in Corsica.

In Corsica there is a stronger element of disorder than mere restlessness born of centuries of rebellion and bloodshed. For the political corruption and for the crimes of the vendetta, which contains to make the state of Corsica a disgrace to France, the spirit of clanship is really responsible. The clan disappeared from the highlands of Scotland before the civilization of the Seventeenth century, with which it was incompatible. In Corsica it flourishes side by side with the advanced and elaborate institutions of republican government, with all of which it is in the bitterest antagonism. The spirit of the clan infects every department of the state. The elections are corrupted by it, the hands of the executive are tied by it, private quarrels are spread and inhibitored by it. It invades the law courts, and utterly destroys the confidence of the people in the impartiality of their magistrates.

The unit in Corsica is not the individual. It is the clan. The leader or patron of the clan is generally a person of considerable wealth and influence, both of which must be at the service of the meanest of his supporters in whatsoever cause he may require it. In return, the vote, the services and even the life of the clansman are at the disposition of his chief. The spirit which in a former age responded to the call to arms is now perverted to secret political intrigue, to the support of the family representative at the elections, even to the darker services of the family vendetta.—National Review.

Ancient Foot Coverings.

If we are to judge of the foot coverings handed down to us as relics from the courts of France, Spain, England and Germany we can but conclude that for an extremely long period of time, probably eight or ten centuries, the dressing of the human foot has been, even in the so called civilized countries, but slightly different and only in degree from the customs of the followers of Confucius for thousands of years.

Fortunately for art, unfortunately for the history of civilization, so called, the artist of olden as well as modern times has not copied, except in portraiture, the cramped foot, the narrow toe, the elevated heel and the pinched instep, which have long accompanied the human foot. It seems reasonable to suppose, however, that the Roman artist and critic, and the Greek as well, fully attempted to give us the perfect foot as found in the well developed Grecian woman of the day.

The sandals worn at the time when Rome was in her splendor were undoubtedly so constructed as to afford ample opportunity for the development of the foot and exhibit the beauty of its conformation.—Science.

Wonderful Vitality of Microbes.

Readers who find it difficult to get over the microbe scare, and who during the season of sweltering heat are longingly looking forward to a January blizzard and zero weather with a hope that microbes and all other minute organism will be frozen stiff will probably be interested in what a great scientist has to say. Professor J. A. Coleman, president of the chemical section of the Glasgow Philosophical society, states that at 133 degs below zero the flesh of animals, such as beef, mutton etc., becomes so hard that it rings like potetmp when struck with an iron rod. And yet, according to experiments by himself and Professor McKendrick, microbia contained in such meat will recover vitality, even after being subjected to such intense cold for 400 hours.—Philadelphia Press.

There will be a meeting of the Republican club at the headquarters in the Oriel block this evening at 8 o'clock p m. All republicans are urged to be present and join the club.

The annual meeting of the Colorado State Agricultural society will be held at 1 p m Saturday Oct 8 at room 27 Bank building and it is hoped a large number of members will attend.

The big Republican rally Saturday evening will be held in the opera house. It will be one of the big rallies of the campaign with Judge Helm Hon Frank Goudy and Hon Charles Hartzel as the principal speakers.

At the Republican rally next Saturday evening the north half of the parquet and parquet circle of the opera house will be reserved for the citizens of Colorado City who may wish to attend. The boxes will be reserved for ladies and their escorts.

Mr Wm H. Newton and family of Cortland, N Y are guests of J F Mayhury at 630 East High street. Mr Newton is a leading manufacturer of carriages in the east and has extensive mining interests in Colorado which he visits annually. His special business this trip is to visit Cripple Creek with a view of making some choice investments.

Early yesterday morning Ed Hadfield the night porter of the Antlers hotel went into the cellar of the hotel to inspect the rooms in the annex. In some manner he slipped and in falling discharged his revolver. The ball entered the fleshy part of the left leg in front and came out the back part. The prisoner is charged with having burglarized the residence of Mr W F McKeehan on the evening of Sept. 29, and taking therefrom jewelry to the amount of $100. A part of the jewelry was found on the prisoner and it has been identified by Mrs. McKeehan. Mr Dana believes that the rest of the jewelry will be recovered. The arrest was made by the assistance of the Denver police department.

THE GAZETTE yesterday morning printed a telegraphic dispatch concerning the suit in the United States court of appeals of the Wood Heirs vs. Jerome B Wheeler and others. The item contained the old story to the effect that the heirs would receive something like $10,000,000. The suit was so thoroughly discussed in the papers last summer that it seems hardly necessary to explain it again. According to those who have the best reason to know the heirs can only recover about $200,000 at the most. Wood was only interested in the Emma claim of the Aspen Mining company now a worked out property. Mr Wheeler would only be responsible for one third of this amount.

Alexander Salvini's tour for this season 1892-93, under the direction of Mr W M Wilkison, has started very auspiciously. He is now playing in Denver where the Tabor opera house is scarcely large enough to hold the patronage. This has been the same almost everywhere. The western cities are echoing the sentiments of those in the east regarding his superb portrayals of the old time heroes of romance and his perspicacity in selecting the romantic drama as a field for his ambition. His magnificent scenic productions of "Don Cæsar de Bazan and "The Three Guardsmen" meet with as much enthusiasm in Colorado as they did at the Boston theater. His excellent supporting company headed by Wm Ledimund begets unstinted praise on all sides. Mr Wilkison and Salvini between them are in a good way to make a fortune out of the California tour alone.

Broadmoor Improvements

The Casino hotel [illegible] When Mr Charles Crale [illegible] of Harper's Weekly [illegible] a few weeks a new house was taken out to Broadmoor. When there the land [illegible] walk entirely around the lake was sung [illegible]. Mr Graham at once [illegible] the idea and in a short time drew for the proprietors of the Casino a sketch of such a walk. The gentlemen interested in the hotel immediately became enthusiastic over the project and were delighted with the sketch. They at once began to make plans for having the colonnade in addition to the hotel. The whole project will cost $350,000, and its projectors are entirely sanguine of success. The colonnade will be enclosed in glass in the cooler months and in summer will be open the glass windows being lowered in places prepared for them. Then only the picturesque pillars after the old colonial style will rise at regular intervals along the walk.

THE LEMHI REORGANIZED

Mr Hagerman at the Head of a New Company

Just a year ago the Lemhi Gold Placer company was organized to mine placer claims in Lemhi county Idaho. The originators of the company were Colorado Springs and Denver capitalists. In some respects the history of the company has been without parallel in mining. At last in this part of the country as the stock was placed in the market at $1 per share and eagerly bought up. It was the general understanding and is to day that the company has some very valuable placer properties. When it was supposed that there was sufficient money on hand work was commenced in good earnest. The placers are seventy miles from a railroad and twelve miles from water and so a good deal of difficulty was experienced in working the placer from the beginning. The company constructed one ditch but that was found to be insufficient. It freezes up at every hot spell. Another and a larger ditch was begun at considerable expense and before it was finished the company found itself with an incomplete ditch and with a debt of $10,000 on its property. Charges of mismanagement were frequent and bitter words in this city and Denver resolved themselves into two factions, one of which wanted a new management and the other clung to the old. The result naturally was that the price of the stock went down to less than 20 cents.

On Tuesday the annual meeting was held in Denver and a reorganization was determined upon that once more puts the property on its feet.

The original company was capitalized for $1,000,000, but the reorganization has a capital of $500,000. It is to be known as the Lemhi Placer Mining company and will have its principal offices in this city. The new officers and board of directors are as follows: J J Hagerman president, W P Bonbright, treasurer, D M Hyman, James B Grant, H E Wood, L H Jackson and H G Lunt. For the purpose of clearing off the indebtedness of the company and continuing the work Mr J J Hagerman of this city, ex Governor Grant and D M Hyman of Denver take 160,000 shares of the new company paying therefore $125,000. The old stockholders are to trade in the 1,000,000 shares of that company for 133⅓ shares in the new company. The old subscribers are to be allowed to purchase 100,000 shares of the new stock at 75 cents per share and 100,000 shares of the new stock will be retained in the treasury. The old stockholders will receive 1½ shares of the new stock for every ten shares of the old. The former stockholders are privileged in buying the 100,000 shares of the new stock at 75 cents to pay 37½ cents down and the remainder in April next, if the money is needed for development.

The reports that have been made on the property are by the best experts in placer mining, that the country affords and are very flattering. Work is to be pushed rapidly and by another year it will be definitely settled whether Lemhi is a great mining property or not.

BAKED POTATOES

Monument's Annual Celebration a Great Success

The Potato Bake is a characteristic Colorado celebration. Its object is to advertise the chief market in the state for the most useful of all vegetables, and the celebration is held at Monument, the center of the region in which the potato thrives best. Yesterday was the day set apart for the third annual celebration and the occasion proved to be the most notable of the kind yet held. The committees in charge have been working hard for some time to make the celebration a success and they have every reason to feel proud of their efforts. The day was bright and warm too bright and too warm if anything. The crowd present numbered at least 2000 persons and everything was done for the comfort and happiness of all. Some two or three hundred Denver people were present and Colorado Springs furnished at least six hundred more while Monument and the Divide turned out en masse.

The Colorado Springs people went up on the morning trains largely although many drove across the country. The D & R G train which leaves here at 10 45 took up the largest crowd of the day.

The celebration was held on the open grounds just west of the D & R G depot at Monument. The visitors were met at the depot by the Castle Rock band and escorted to the grounds. Here had been provided seats for several hundred people in front of a platform. To the right was spread lunch which the good women of the Divide had provided. This consisted of ham sandwiches, baked potatoes and hot coffee. The tables formed a square 100 feet long by 8 feet wide and it was a great sight to see the hungry people crowding up to feed. There was plenty for all and to spare for a second time. The remains disposed of [illegible] pounds of [illegible] and at least a ton of potatoes.

While the dinner was in progress [illegible] W H Jackson the veteran [illegible] Take Over the Range [illegible] was first and foremost in the people's party. The presiding officer then stated that [illegible] the attention of many political speeches and introduced Hon M M Ballou of Woodland Park. Mr Ballou spoke for a few minutes touching upon the agricultural and mineral resources of this county and congratulated the promoters of the Potato Bake upon the success of their celebration.

A good quartet of local singers rendered several songs and the band played after which the speaking was resumed and continued as the crowd did not seem to care for speech making.

The people scattered all over the grounds to find amusement. A large covered shed contained the exhibit of fruit vegetables and cereals from the Divide experimental station and from various parts of the county. The exhibit was certainly fine and was a revelation to many persons. There was also a good exhibit of Cripple Creek minerals and a special display of the Divide potatoes.

The crowd found plenty of amusement for there were side shows shooting targets, ring throwing and almost every adjunct of a successful county fair.

During the afternoon Shideler of Monument and Boer of Denver ran a foot race of 100 yards for a prize of $5. The Denver man won.

A greased pig was turned loose and was captured by Leysenring of the Denver ball club.

Percy Stockbridge amused a crowd with fancy rifle shooting and there was a horse race up in the town.

At 2 o'clock a ball game was started between the Jack Hills of Denver and a picked nine which was watched with interest by a large crowd.

Many persons interested in the material progress of the county took the opportunity of visiting the big reservoir and dam which the state is having constructed at Monument. In the evening a ball was given in Walker's hall, and there was also dancing on a platform on the grounds during the afternoon. In fact it was a day of pleasure and profit to all and each visitor was ready to declare it the biggest and best bake yet held.

The Old Way of Passing Bills.

A document found among the Duke of Rutland's papers at Belvoir castle throws a curious light upon the mode of getting private bills through the house of commons in the days of King Charles II. The country land was then represented by a [illegible] who was a lineal descendant of Lord de Roos an affair that caused a great deal of gossip in its day. One of Rutland's agents writes to his employer [illegible] On Wednesday last [illegible] six and forty of the house of commons to the Dog Tavern in the palace yard at Westminster when were present Mr Attorney General and Mr George Montague. As soon as they had dined we carried them over into the house of commons and there passed the bill as the committee thereupon [illegible] amendments as ordered it to be reported the next day. A Way to Save Rent.
We own a good house of 5 rooms, bath, inside closet, hot and cold water, sewer connection, stone cellar, front and back yard, good lawn, shrubbery and trees, lot 50x190 feet, on South street, where cars pass every eight minutes, that we offer for sale. Terms $400 cash and $40 a month. The house was built by day labor, has double floors, double wall and roof braces, plaster finish in every room, and is as good a house as is on the market. The price is $1600. We do not believe as good a lot can be purchased and building duplicated for the same money. We will sell this because we own a great many vacant lots and will improve them when this is sold.
